

The Historical Crisis Committee is quite different from any other MUN committee. It is a continuous crisis committee where Delegates represent historical figures instead of states and their actions have an immediate impact on the way the committee behaves resulting in an unpredictable, volatile but at the same time exciting and unforgettable experience. Delegates participating in the HCC will thus need to partake in intensive and urgent debate and be prepared for any possible crisis that might erupt while still possessing a fine-tuned handle on diplomatic conduct. Detailed research and preparation prior to the conference will be important, but the ability to think and act fast will also be essential.
